McCarthy Asks Watch on CIA

By ALBERT EISELE
Dispatch Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Sen. Eugene McCarthy, D-Minn., long an advocate of tightening the reins of the central intelligence agency (CIA), today proposed a senate watchdog committee to review CIA activities.

McCarthy said he plans to introduce a resolution when the 89th congress reconvenes in January which would create a senate select committee on foreign intelligence.

The Minnesota senior senator, a member of the senate foreign relations committee, said the nine-member committee would "make a full and complete investigation and study of the CIA."

He said the committee would be required to report its findings and recommendations to the senate no later than Jan. 31, 1967.

McCarthy pointed out that because of the necessity of secrecy in CIA operations, normal procedures for congressional review cannot be applied.

McCarthy said his proposed select committee — a special committee created to investigate a particular problem and report to the standing committee — would provide an opportunity for "adjustments, both in operation and supervision" of the CIA, "if that should prove desirable."

McCarthy said the role of the CIA in the Dominican Republic, Vietnam, Cuba and other areas "has raised serious questions about the relationship of the agency to the process of making and directing foreign policy."

McCarthy was serving in the house of representatives when the CIA was established nearly 20 years ago, and because he had been in intelligence work during World war II, was among congressmen consulted when the CIA was created.

He has introduced resolutions several times in the past few years advocating joint senate-house committees to check on the CIA, but has not been successful in those efforts.
